Proposal

Encourage administrative personnel who are tenured within an academic department to teach one course per year.

Report

Twenty-four administrators hold tenure in an academic department. Two thirds of these administrators (16) do not currently teach courses. Five of the administrators teach for extra compensation. Three administrators teach at least one course as a part of their load.

The Provost Office will encourage administrators with tenure to teach at least one course per year in their academic department, if needed and if time permits, without extra compensation. If all 24 administrators taught one course per year as a part of their load, a savings of $50,400 could be realized in adjunct stipends.
